Local agency receives $500,000 grant to fight opioid addiction

By GIUSEPPE RICAPITO
The Union Democrat

Jessi Gough emerged from a temporary retirement in public health service last year after Mother Lode Job Training offered a range of employment opportunities funded by a half-million grant to deal with the opiate crisis.

Gough, 71, a former drug and alcohol addict who will be 22 years sober in June, was motivated by a sense of duty to return to the field of substance abuse, rehabilitation and community service, she said.

"I was aware of this position and I'm a young 71 and I need to work," she said. "I decided I wanted to work in something that I care about, not Ross Dress-For-Less."

Gough's employment is part of a push from the federal and state governments to deal with the opioid crisis — addiction to pharmaceuticals such as oxycodone or hydrocodone, illegal drugs such as heroin or synthetics such as fentanyl — and the blight that accompanies addiction.

Last year, Mother Lode Job Training was awarded a $512,500 grant by the state to increase employment in the field of substance abuse and addiction, but also find jobs for former addicts.

"It's a national issue and our region is highlighted as one of three in the state of California needing this money. There are a lot of agencies and nonprofits in our region addressing the issue. People need to reach out to us," said Amy Torres, MLJT operations manager.

The California Employment Development Department received a $3.9 million National Health Emergency Dislocated Worker Grant from the U.S. Department of Labor to address the opioid crisis. Overall, the funds were intended to provide employment services (including 54 temporary positions) to people affected by opioids or were unemployed in the services that deal with the crisis.

The funds were awarded to the Humboldt County Workforce Development Board (Humboldt County), the Merced County Workforce Development Board (Merced, Kern, Inyo, Mono counties) and the Mother Lode Workforce Development Board (Amador, Calaveras, Tuolumne, Mariposa counties).

A Department of Labor memo provided by Mother Lode Job Training indicated rural counties were selected because access to opioid treatment was more limited in those locations. According to the document, the counties have the highest rate of opioid-related overdoses in the state, approximately 15 to 20 people per 100,000 residents.

The Mother Lode, described by the document as the "Middle Sierra," has recorded 163,000 opioid prescriptions, 90 opioid overdoses, and 10 opioid related deaths (it does not provide a specific year or range for this data).

Gough, who was originally from the Bay Area and moved to Jamestown in 1982, was 48 when she entered into treatment.

Following her sobriety, Gough worked in the substance abuse field for nearly two decades, at the rehabilitation centers Changing Echoes in Angels Camp, Maynard's Recovery Center in Tuolumne and Kings View Community Services in Sonora for DUI offenders.

The years as a substance abuse counselor took their toll after "heart-wrenching" losses of young users who left treatment and overdosed.

After a year away from substance abuse work, and keeping her focus on her continuing recovery, Gough took a temp job as an administrative assistant at Sierra Hope in Angels Camp, an STD testing facility, a community food pantry that also provides services for low-income housing.

"I'm really grateful that I get to have this opportunity," Gough said. "I really can't afford to be out of the workforce."

But finding others for the available positions has continued to be a struggle.

Torres said the search was hampered by the low unemployment rates throughout the Mother Lode and that most people were able to hold down at least some employment.

"A lot of people aren't really looking for opportunities to change a career path," Torres said. "A lot of people are working two and three jobs to survive. We really want to put it out there, this is an opportunity to not only gain a certification or skill that can make you more marketable for a higher paying job, but also making a living wage to support your family."

The counties in the Mother Lode have unemployment levels commensurate with the 3.7 percent unemployment level statewide: Amador, 3.7 percent; Calaveras, 3.5 percent; Mariposa, 4.6 percent; Tuolumne, 3.9 percent, according to unemployment data in California for Dec. 2019.

The main prerequisite for eligibility to the grant is that you are not currently working. Torres specified that dislocated workers (terminated or laid-off), workers who have not worked for 15 weeks or longer, workers are eligible for unemployment, are receiving unemployment payments or have exhausted unemployment would be eligible.

Workers who are unemployed in some way related to the opioid crisis, including recovered addicts, can also apply, she said.

"All of these jobs need to be tied to addressing the crisis," Torres said. "The temporary jobs will be things like peer support, recovery navigator, intake coordinator, program support specialist with public agencies or non-profits working to address the issue. It's such an issue in our county almost every agency is charged with addressing an issue like this."

MLJT received the funding in April 2019, but did not roll out the program until December due to a "misinterpretation of the contract" with the third party employment service who charges a fee to MLJT be the employer of record. Funding still comes through MLJT, said Executive Director Dave Thoeny.

Torres said MLJT has approximately $400,000 to spend through Sept. 30, mainly through the temporary job positions, which will last through about that date.

"The remaining will be to certification and support services," she said.

According to the grant, MLJT can be given an extension for another year or it could be reallocated to the other regional California recipients.

Torres said MLJT has put two people in temporary jobs with three more in the works. Their goal is to fill four more temporary positions.

Other sites partnered with MLJT to provide employment services associated with the grant are Mariposa Heritage House, a sobriety support center in Mariposa, and Turning Point of Arnold, a rehabilitation center.

MLJT is also providing payment for training and support services (transportation, housing, childcare or clothing) for people seeking to attain certification for substance abuse counselors. The next training classes begin in May, Torres said, and out of 12 available slots, three were previously filled.

gesting that exposure was limited in the building and that residents now in quarantine would likely be able to return to their flats within a few days. The WHO chief said he hoped the Geneva meeting will end with a roadmap on how researchers should tackle the crisis.

The assembled medical scholars, public health officials and government representatives are also expected to discuss ways to close the current knowledge gaps on the origin, transmission and treatment of the virus.

Tedros urged scientists to collaborate and share their findings. "Publications, patents and profits are not what matters now. What matters most is stopping the outbreak and saving lives," he said.

The virus has thrown industries that do business with China into chaos, including travel and tourism.

The Diamond Princess, operated by Carnival cruises, remained quarantined off the coast of Yokohama, Japan, where it has been for a week. At least 135 cases of infection have been confirmed on board, with the ill removed and taken to hospital.

Thailand, meanwhile, became the latest country to deny entry to a luxury cruise ship operated by the Holland America Line, even though no cases have been confirmed on board.

Thai Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha said on Tuesday the government will not allow the Westerdam, with its 1,455 guests and 802 crew, to dock owing to fears of the virus spreading but will provide humanitarian aid
